

This article, which completes the series of articles on short-term weather forecast automation, introduces the use of numerical models in weather forecast. Regardless of the field of activity, the interest for the weather, in various places and for different periods of time, is high. Under these conditions, the most important practical application of meteorology is weather prediction.